Portrayal of the Patriarchal System in Bama's Karukku

Dr. Sachin L. Patki
Shubhangi S. Girbide

Introduction –

The condition of Dalit women in Indian society is as tragic as shown in Karukku and labeled with significant depression. They are oppressed on the basis of caste and gender as well as classes. Karukku goes very significantly and presents questions on religious issues which harm our society. Many issues of violence have been raised in Bama's fictional writings Dalit women, beating of wife, sexual harassment, loneliness, abandoned by women husband, ignorance etc. From a larger perspective, her literary works depict the neglect and exploitation of Dalit women as a whole society in the hands of the upper class society. They are social and economic exploitation by upper castes. From this autobiographical novel, Bama tries to reflect, especially her own grief, both inside and out society, the plight of Dalit women and their daily social reality community. She tries to present the social reality of Dalit women who struggle every day for their existence. The present paper is based on patriarchal rules in which women have to go through rules made by male members of the family or community. In this case, women are forced to go through the rough roads made for them, they are separate, separate and as 'other'. Since strict practice is prevalent, they cannot speak for themselves and eventually become subalterns. This reflects the study questions of women depicted in selected text. It is highlighted in terms of class, caste and vision religion with the right lens of subaltern reference.

Karukku is an important novel that reflects the plight of Dalit women patriarchal and a society based on caste. At every moment, the protagonist goes through some kind of patriarchal state or traditional grief. This type of harassment often pushes women into the classroom subalterns. Wherever Dalit women go, they are surrounded by many situations of traditional caste background. At home, on the other hand, they are committed to patriarchy rules; they are stuck in many social and patriarchal rules. This eventually pulls them in the category of 'others'. In the selected text, Bama depicts the sad reality of Dalit women. She explores her own tragic story about patriarchy and culture established among Dalits background. Bama writes in the novel,

"In this society if you are born into a low caste, you are forced to live a life of humiliation and degradation until your death. Even after death, caste-difference does not disappear....If you are born into a low caste every moment of your life is a moment of struggle"¹¹

Traditionally, the structure of society has been divided into elements that do not allow making the lower castes independent. In this system, the lower castes are always treated as such the worst human. They are not given the necessary opportunity to move forward. The so-called castes and communities in Indian society divide people. In the text the protagonist belongs to the Parayar caste, usually a lower caste group in the south State of Tamil Nadu. They are surrounded by many higher caste groups like Nadar, Naicker, Chettiyar, Aasaari, Thevar, etc. Bama described traditional and cultural persecution by upper caste groups. Women of a foreign race are always bound to show their respect and service to the upper castes and in their own homes. Dalit Women suffer in two ways. As Chandra Talpade Mohanty in her essay, Under the West Eyes: Feminist scholarship and colonial discourse, describes the dual colony of the third world Women. First, they suffer from Western colonization; second, they suffer existing patriarchy and tradition in their own home. A society that has caste elements strictly monitored, no space was left for women. Which is drawn in line Dalit women and upper castes are not just a line. This is a line that divides the whole in some sections of humanity. This is similar to the electric shock generated by the storm that destroys anything that comes before it. Bama refers to her childhood Experiences in the novel,

"The elder went straight up to the Naicker, bowed low and extended the packet towards him, cupping the hand that held the string with his other hand....He said everybody believed that Naicker were upper caste, and therefore must not touch Parayars."¹²

For the first time, Bama saw this Paraiya father bowing before Naicker. This view of the author's thinking changed completely. At her very young age when she wasn't even there learn about caste and untouchability, what she had seen, experienced and had insulted. The cruelty and dominance of the upper castes has always remained dangerous for lower castes. They are dominating the Dalits in every possible way. Dalit women have to face all kinds of exploitation. They are bound to follow the rules of caste strictly. Social discrimination is a serious issue in Dalit society. On the other hand, Untouchability appears frequently in the text which further exacerbates the discrimination. According to the text, when Bama asks her grandmother questions about their exploitation, she answers they are bound to obey the Dalits because of their caste and money power if they cannot fight back because sooner or later they will have to go for wages work in their home.

Usually upper caste people are directly harsh with Dalit women. But, many times atrocities against Dalit men have a more serious impact on the lives of Dalit women. Bama reflected on a similar incident from her childhood. It was such a horrible incident where all the people were she had to hide in the forest for many days in her village.

"All of a sudden a huge gang of policemen came out of the Chaliyars settlement, batons in hand, drove our men back ruthlessly, mercilessly beating up those they caught, before arresting them....Outside, we heard the thud-thud of police boots stamping up and down, the sharp sounds of blows as our men were struck repeatedly, and the yells, 'Ayyo Amma', of unendurable pain."¹³

The caste differences are so strong that he completely attacked the entire village elders. The upper caste groups are very aggressive towards the Dalits. It was for a small cemetery, they tried to kill Dalits. These upper class groups have huge areas of land but they also tried to grab a small cemetery from poor dalits. Social rules have put Dalits in a secondary position. Government and Institutions there is also an unpleasant focus on lower caste groups. The policemen who are called the guardians of the law in the text blindly follow and are on the side of the upper castes. There is a whole police squad a feast is being given to arrest Dalit men. What can these women do in such a desolate situation, where will they go for help when everything is against them? They become silent just expect a good turn every other day before the situation.

The Karukku text depicts the plight of women in the Dalit community many ways from a young girl to an old woman. This text asks many questions about the patriarchal rules that exist in our society that oppress women. By this text, Bama discovers the hardships and daily realities of Dalit women. She is asking herself questions about various colonies and traditional institutions oppressing Dalits. Women as portrayed at the same time they have paid workers in the text, they play an important role in supporting the family from their daily income. But they have not been given proper status and recognition in the family. Women in the workplace are not paid the true value of their work, men are paid more than they are. Moreover, those who get paid women are used responsibly to run the family and are spent on household chores. But men can spend their money as they wish without any proper interest from the family. Such limits Women who live with men are bound to carry out family responsibilities irresponsible in family matters. Sexual harassment is another important issue in India texts. Women are not considered more than sexual objects. Bama expresses sex exploitation of

Non-interacting String and Holographic Dark Energy Cosmological Models in $f(R)$ Theory of Gravitation

Abstract

In this paper, a new class of string and holographic dark energy (HDE) cosmological model in the context of $f(R)$ theory of gravity using the Kasner metric is considered. The exact solution of field equations are obtained by using the relation between average scale factor and the scalar function $f(R)$. It is observed that the universe is accelerating and expanding. The string phase of the universe is present at early stage of evolution of the universe. The universe is dominated by quintessence type HDE at present. Effect of the curvature function $f(R)$ is also observed on dynamical parameters.

1 Introduction

Nowadays, it is widely accepted that the universe is experiencing an accelerated expansion. Recent observations from type Ia supernovae [1, 2] combined with large-scale structure [3] and cosmic microwave background (CMB) [4, 5] anisotropies have provided the main evidence for this cosmic acceleration. In order to address the issue of accelerated expansion of the universe, two different kinds of approaches have been proposed: the first one is the concept of dark energy, and the second is modifications to general relativity. As per first approach the accelerated expansion is caused by an exotic type of force known as "dark energy", whose exact nature is still unknown. Several dynamical dark energy (DE) candidates have been proposed to understand the nature of DE, including the cosmological constant, quintessence [6], phantom [7, 8], k-essence [9], tachyon [10] and interacting Chaplygin gas models [11]. The equation of state of dark energy (DE) is used to describe cosmic evolution and the accelerated expansion of the universe and it is defined as $\omega = \frac{p}{\rho}$, where ρ and p are the energy density and pressure respectively.

The second approach is modification of GR, these theories are known as modified theories of gravitation. Among the several modified theories of gravitation, the $f(R)$ theory of gravity is regarded as the simplest and most straightforward generalization of Einstein's general theory of relativity (GTR). The higher-order curvature invariants are the functions of the Ricci scalar in this theory. The general formulation for reconstructing the modified $f(R)$ gravity for any given FRW metric was developed by Nojiri and Odintsov [12]. Capozziello et al. [13] examined the exact solution of cosmological models in the context of $f(R)$ gravity. Nojiri and Odintsov [14] proposed and demonstrated that the $f(R)$ gravity model as a viable candidate for unifying early-time inflation with late-time cosmic acceleration. In the review of $f(R)$ theories, Felice and Tsujikawa [15] address various topics, including inflation, dark energy, cosmological perturbations, local gravity constraints, and spherically symmetric solutions in weak and strong gravitational backgrounds, etc. In $f(R)$ gravity, Tripathy and Mishra [16] have described the dynamics of anisotropic LRS Bianchi type-I models and obtained the solutions to the field equations. Recently, Agrawal et al. [17] explored the Bianchi type-I cosmological model in the $f(R)$ theory of gravity with perfect fluid and discussed the behaviour of gravitational baryogenesis using two distinct forms of the Ricci scalar.

Another method for explaining dark energy within the context of modified gravity is holographic dark energy (HDE) [18, 19], which has received a lot of interest in recent years. The EoS parameter is one of the most important cosmic parameter to describe the behaviour and dynamics of the universe. The holographic principle is one of the main fundamental quantum gravitational principles that may be used to investigate the nature of dark energy. G't Hooft [20] was the first to propose holographic dark energy, a hypothetical kind of dark energy based on the holographic principle. Nojiri and Odintsov [21] studied the generalised holographic dark energy spacetime in $f(R)$ gravity with perfect fluid, where the corresponding infrared cut-off is determined by combining several FRW parameters. In general relativity, Sarkar and Mahanta [22] and Santhi et al. [23] investigated the correspondence between HDE and quintessence cosmological models in various contexts.

Friedmann-Robertson-Walker (FRW) models are the best for representing the present large-scale structure of the universe. The FRW model is homogeneous and isotropic in nature. When we think about the early universe, we believe that it was not like today, i.e. it was not isotropic. In order to know the early structure of the universe, we
